A top photographer is desperate to find a Gordon Brown lookalike after a failed six year hunt.

Fed-up Alison Jackson is renowned for snapping doubles of the famous in embarrassing positions.

She said: "I still cannot find anyone to match his huge bovine features. I've never had such difficulty finding a match."

The film-maker, 37, has become a household name with her BBC2 Double Take series and Channel 4 shows.

Jackson's mocked-up shots have included David Beckham wearing wife Victoria's knickers, the Queen on the toilet and Tony Blair letting George Bush win at tennis.

She is now holding open casting sessions with Esquire to try to finally find a candidate to appear in the men's magazine.
