

Tomorrow: Alison Jackson's Fake Take

This week our satirical video artist finds Prince William teaching the Queen how to get down to some R&B

The Sunday Times

Friday February 18 2011, 5.10pm,
The Sunday Times

To watch Alison Jackson's exclusive Fake Take video of Prince William and the Queen visit thesundaytimes.co.uk this Sunday

Thought-provoking, incisive and above all, extraordinarily funny, Alison Jackson's video work has established her as one of the most influential commentators on contemporary culture. She is a BAFTA-winning artist who explores the cult of celebrity using convincingly realistic lookalikes. From Simon Cowell enduring a mortifying back, sack and crack wax in a Hollywood health club, to Peter Mandelson imagined as a cross-dressing, ermine-draped Lord of the realm, Jackson's work allows the viewer/ voyeur to eavesdrop on private scenarios they've imagined but never seen.

Each week Jackson is satirising the world of current affairs and celebrity exclusively for the Sunday Times - which means you get to be peak into her wonderful warped world whenever you like. And coming soon - look out for the Sunday Times's very special Alison Jackson archive, featuring dozens of her best video and photography stunts, with spoof interviews, outtakes and eye witness testimonies.